It's important that donations are made to a variety of these campaigns because while all are in the general area of the campsite and do communicate, the different campaigns don't always or can't always share different resources. Grab a group of friends, make strips of paper, and shuffle to make donations.

It has come to my attention that this regained popularity in recent weeks. As the author, I'm deeply humbled by the support in the form of reblogs and likes even despite the crass language. I'm not Lakota or from the areas of these tribes. I'm from a Pueblo in New Mexico (shout-out to the Pueblo camp at standing Rock!) And Navajo Nation. I made this post at s tumultuous time in my life when I had accrued so much capital and privilege in the white man's world. Back when these were working links, I was a community organizer that went into a post traumatic stress disorder episode while this post was getting popular 2 years ago when Standing Rock was still at camp. I ask folks to reblog this out of respect to the many people and messages passed that allows for campaigns like these to exist. I'll never know how much was raised but know that y'all were a part of something huge and important. That two years is not a long time and progress is like watching grass grow.

It's true; cats see us as giant dumb hairless babies. That's why they bring us half-dead prey– to teach us how to hunt and eat properly. That's why they attack when we rub their bellies– that's how parent cats teach kittens to defend themselves. That's also why they meow– cats communicate with other adults on a frequency we can't hear, but meow at kittens because their ears aren't fully developed. They even specialized a set of meows they use only for humans, because we are especially deaf babies.

We are all of us dumb kittens.

So, the fact that it's not the Pietro that we'd met before works on so many different levels. I think if we hand't answered "Who was Ralph?", there would have been an upper as well, so you got to meet Ralph. He's been living in that house and Agatha moved in and life changed dramatically for him. Plus, as a show that was playing with meta, there's been a lot of sit-com recasting, and we were having a good time with that idea of the second Darrin. For the fans that were disappointed, I'm just going to say: you know that those things are coming, right? The multiverse is coming. Mutants are coming. So, there you go.

A theory I love is that Ralph Bohner is Jimmy's witness protection person and he chose that name for himself. Are you able to confirm who the witness protection person is?

Not as yet, but stay tuned.

One more clarification I hope you can offer me: What happened to our friend the S.W.O.R.D. agent beekeeper when Wanda rewinds his ass out of Westview? Where'd he go?

I'm sure that he got turned back into a guy in a hazmat suit. He's probably wandering somewhere around Westview, New Jersey, looking for some S.W.O.R.D agents to help.

Last we talked, you told me about having lunch with Dick Van Dyke and how he let you pick his brain for the series. And I told you, "People ~~are going to start~~ to suspect Better Ralph to be the witness protection person and he's in real peter maximoff marvel! 😤

Death to the Monster of Nature

There are many examples of terrible parents in MCU; Howard, Odin, Ego, Thanos etc. The newest member of this club is Evanora. I believe there is a certain kind of cruelty and prejudice in a parent who condemns their child to death. Specially when the said child begs them for help over and over again.

Evanora, the head of Agatha’s coven accuses her of betraying the coven by stealing knowledge above her age and station and practicing the darkest of magic. Agatha answers that “I did not break your rules. They simply bent to my power”. This implies to me that she has found loopholes in the rules and used them and/or she was so powerful that the magical rules didn’t work for her.

After this admission, the witches start chanting and Agatha recognizes what they’re doing and panics and starts begging to them. Interestingly the first thing she says isn’t begging for her life. It’s a warning for the coven’s safety.

> “No, I can’t control it*! If only you would teach me! Help me! Please!”*

Then she turns to her mother and begs her, pleads with her. But Evanora starts chanting with other witches too.

> “Mors monstrum natura”

Which if I have translated it correctly(I don’t know Latin. I used Wikitionary to find the meaning), means “death to the monster of nature”. Agatha’s expression is so heartbreaking when she realizes her own mother condemns her to death.

When the coven try to execute Agatha, at first she screams in pain, but as she had warned them and to her own surprise, her power which she could not control, reacts and starts taking the coven’s power from them.

Then Evanora joins the execution. But Agatha still has enough compassion to not let her mother be affected.

[Source of the gifs]

Again she begs her mother that she can be good. But Evanora rejects her.

Please!, I can be good!

No. You can not.

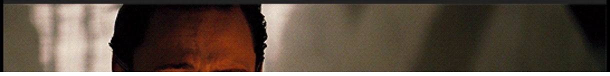
As some fans has noticed, this moment is a parallel to the scene where Odin rejects Loki and denies his love and approval from him, when Loki physically and mentally is hanging on the edge of an abyss. This causes Loki to commit suicide.

I could have done it father.
I could have done it. For you. For all of us!

[Source of the gifs]

But there are other similarities that Odin and Evanora share.

Odin raised his children with the belief that Jotuns were monsters, while one of his children was adopted from that race. He hid the truth about Loki's race from him, claiming he wanted to protect Loki from the truth. Meaning the truth, which was Loki being Jotun, in Odin's mind was so horrible that Loki needed protecting from!



You're my son. I wanted only to protect you from the truth.
What, because I'm the monster parents tell their children about at night?

In TDW, Odin doesn't give Loki a fair trial. Because he has already made up his mind about him. He calls Loki a creature he doesn't recognize and "Laufeyson" based on the canonical tie-in comic. Odin tells Loki that his birth right was to die as a child, cast out onto a frozen rock.

Your birthright... was to die!

He tells Loki that the reason he won't execute him is Frigga and sentences Loki to never seeing his mother again and solitary confinement for life. This for a crime Odin himself committed in a worse way in the past. A crime which was done when Loki's mind was under the influence of the mind stone and he was under duress and threat of torture.

Evanora doeas the same to Agatha. Agatha in that scene, seemed like a young and curious witch who is a little arrogant because of her amount of power. She probably sought knowledge and experimented with dark magic because of these characteristics and her thirst for knowledge. But she was not evil. As she warns the coven that she can't control her power and repeatedly begs them and her mother for help and teaching. But Evanora has already made up her mind about her. She doesn't ask Agatha for her reasons, or what exactly happened. What they brought Agatha to, wasn't a trial, it was a planned execution. Evanora sees her child as a monster and probably fears her because of how powerful Agatha is, and condemns her to death.

Still after all their parents done to them, Agatha and Loki still feel some kind of affection for them.

Loki, after erasing Odin's memory brings him to a retirement home so he can be comfortable and you can clearly see how sad he was after Odin's death.

And Agatha takes her mother's pendant hesitantly, and wears it all the time afterward.

As a token from the mother who created her worst fear. Because the execution was where Wanda's magic(which shows someone their worst fear), took them in the final battle.

Agatha and Loki, unlike what their parents believed, were not monsters, nor deserved death.

- the initial fact they're talking through a hand puppet with the oobi eyes
- the horrible, horrible desynch between their words and the movements of the hand
- lack of any clear place the hand is looking
- "dwells in the depths". just the whole sentence itself and the weird inflection on it.
- the fact that the dude clearly already discovered this thing and was so moved by it they went to record it
- "wuoah", and the split second of open-palmed hand that no longer resembles a puppet
- the weird fade in on the music and the fact it sounds a little distorted at first

I think it's really interesting how one of the worst barriers in BBC Merlin is ignorance.

Almost everyone in the show is trying to do the right thing from their perspective. It's the ignorance of certain things that makes their actions seem wrong to different people, and it's easier for the audience to relate most with Merlin because he knows as much as they do. Morgana (at least up till the end of s3) and the sorcerers supporting her are trying to engage in revolution to free themselves without knowing that Arthur is the one destined to free them. Arthur is trying to protect his people. Merlin is trying to do both, but with the knowledge of his and Arthur's destiny.

How many of the sorcerers who attacked Camelot knew of Merlin and Arthur's destiny? I can only remember Nimueh, who's antagonism seems to be more of a personal hatred of Uther and his betrayal, similar to how Morgana's hatred of Arthur overcomes her sense of justice in s4 and 5, and Mordred, who I think would at least have second thoughts of opposing Arthur had he knew Kara was given a chance. It's very telling that Alator was quick to change sides after he learned of Merlin's identity despite supporting Morgana before. He even says that there are many people like him who are willing to sacrifice their lives to bring about the golden age.

Was Alvarr and his band of renegade wrong? Was Mary Collins wrong? Was Edwin wrong? Were the people who wanted revenge upon Uther for the loss of their loved ones wrong? Is it wrong to understand Kilgharrah's motives when he attacks the kingdom who killed all of his kind and entrapped him in a dungeon for 20 years? Everyone plays with different views of right and wrong because those views are not centralised in the first place. This is what makes the series so interesting - because it wants the audience to have stakes on both sides of the conflict.

This works for Arthur's side too. Arthur's most positive views of magic comes from season 1. That's because in that season the memories of the druid raids are closer to him than in later ones, and also because he is given more positive experiences with magic (the ball of light, Will, the unicorn, etc). However, after that point all the magic that he encounters, according to the knowledge which he possesses of the situation, has been used negatively.

He nearly dies because of a creature of magic, Sigan tries to take over Camelot, druids kidnap Morgana, a troll uses his father to take over Camelot, Gaius nearly dies because of Aredian, Morgause tries to use him to kill his father, a shapeshifter kills Camelot's citizens, the undead attack Camelot, a dragon kills innocent people, a goblin wrecks havoc, he is nearly killed in a tourney by the use of enchanted swords, Morgause and Cendred use Elyan, Gwen and Morgana to get to him, Dragoon tries to bring dishonour to Camelot by enchanting him and Gwen, Morgana betrays Camelot, Gaius is tortured (yes, his actions does play a large part in this and he is shown to wrecked with guilt by it. There's a reason why in the next episode he talks so highly of Gaius), a monster of magic kills people in outlying villages, Morgana takes over Camelot and kills innocent people again....

The only positive experience he has with magic in seasons 2 and 4 is the knowledge that Dragoon tried to save Uther. And yet in season 5 he still stops a sorceress from being executed despite people claiming that her magic brought down a plague upon the village. He still gives Mordred a chance to become a knight (I hc that Arthur knew Mordred was a druid, but not that he had magic. Mordred was half naked when being treated by gaius in 5×05. Arthur would have seen his druid mark, unless he came in after Gaius bandaged him up. He also doesn't question how Mordred knows Kara, a druid). He still believes that in his heart, he should save Mordred and lift the ban, but his mind - his experiences - become an argument against his heart. And it is a strong argument from Arthur's point of view. You could say that Arthur was a hypocrite when he used magic to save Gwen and Uther, but you could also say that there was a part of him still hanging on to his views from season 1. What Dragoon and Dolma says to Arthur in both occasions regarding magic echoes Arthur's own views at finding a poultice at Gwen's - to save her dying father, that doesn't make her guilty of creating a plague. One's the act of, of kindness, of love, the other of evil. I don't believe evil's in this girl's heart. / There is no evil in sorcery. Only in the hearts of men. / I know you have suffered because of magic, as many have. But not all magic, and not all sorcerers are the same. I wish only to show you that magic can be used for good. And I think that after 5×09 Arthur does internalize Dolma's saying. He never once speaks against Kara's heritage as a druid when he talks about or to her. He explicitly states that her wrong is in murder, not in possession of magic.

This is what Merlin understands - that the conflict comes mainly from differing points of views caused primarily by ignorance of the prophecy itself. Merlin sees in 2×08 that Arthur is completely able of accepting magic and going against Uther, just like he knows that those who possess magic have an ultimate right to fight for what they believe. As one of the most informed people in the show, this is the line that Merlin tries to straddle everyday; to give his people freedom by making Arthur the king he is destined to be, even if to outsiders the two seem mutually exclusive.

The true wrong of the show was to place that burden on one shoulder alone.

Unironically leftist parties / coops / associations / etc should be looking at every charity currently being controlled by a religious authority of some kind and creating a direct replacement to those services which does not require the individual to submit to any particular ideology or authority to receive services.

Where I'm from clothing drives were huge because people couldn't afford to get clothes for their kids. Do you have any idea how powerful it is for conservative organizations to fulfill that type of welfare? That sort of thing is precisely why rural people in the USA genuinely believe that conservatives are "Fighting for their rights" or whatever.

This is something we definitely need more of!

Food Not Bombs is one organization worth getting involved in. I know my local one does three hot meal shares a week, has a weekly "free market" for clothing and toiletry items, and distributes groceries, pet items, and menstrual products. Every group is independently organized, though, so your local one may vary - and you may have the opportunity to add something based on the needs of your community.

If you know about any leftist organizations doing things like this, add them to this post!

a-j-a-x

To add on, look into your local interfaith orgs! While non religious mutual aid is super important, religion/religious community IS vital to some religious people. Interfaith orgs especially are committed to compassion and understanding between different religions, and are usually way less insistent you agree with them than like an evangelical church.

Additionally, religious orgs have more experience in filling needs that non religious groups may overlook such as:

Do you know any kosher or halal recipes for your soup kitchen? Off the top of your head, can you tell me what makes a meal kosher or halal?

If a homeless Muslim woman needs a new hijab, do you have any to give her? What about a kippah for a Jewish man? Do you have any headscarves for orthodox christian women or Mennonite women? Do you list any of these items on your clothing drive donation lists?

Does your free little library have copies of religious affiliated texts that will resonate with religious people? (Many religious ppl believe leftists want to eradicate religion esp after stalin infamously banned Christian orthodox practices in the Soviet union-something MANY older russian orthodox Christians remember)

Does your homeless shelter have any prayer mats or shabbat candles? Do you know where to get them? Do you know how to select the correct ones?

Not all of these are essential to surviving but it does demonstrate compassion for people and recognizes their nonphysical needs. It also cuts into the power of conservative religious groups by demonstrating that others care. And just like idk how else to say it but....religious people deserve to be treated respectfully and have their spiritual needs considered. You don't have to agree with them and if they're bigots you certainly don't have to cater to that but religious people overall do deserve at least some small considerations.

As a final note, I've focused on abrahamic religions for this bc that's what I know but different places have different prominent religions! Also if you're delivering mutal aid to Native American communities, ask about their religious needs and what you can do to accommodate them.

> Religious people deserve to be treated respectfully and have their > spiritual needs considered.

This is an excellent point! I tend to emphasize local groups anyway, but definitely look for local interfaith orgs since the religious makeup and needs of your community will be unique.

Not sure who knows this already but 6 months ago, Denver started having mental health professionals respond to mental health incidents instead of police. Some early data:

- 0 arrests were made among 748 incidents
- 41% of people were taken to a shelter or hospital
- 0 incidents were violent
- 6x a day, police were freed up to work on more serious criminal activity “Defund the police” materializes through progressive steps like this. We need to pressure more law enforcement agencies to follow suit.

seal with a credit card. Just leave it there so you don't get in trouble.

So I max the defrost on my trusty hybrid, grab a tool bag from inside, and, ignoring the red Helvetica bold instructions, pop the crustacean off with little effort. It begins to whine, begging me to concede to the Man, but instead I quickly bring it in the apartment, puncture the speaker with a flathead, and begin disassembly.

IIRC it only uses Phillips screws, Torx "security" bolts and intimidation to prevent you from owning your own Barnacle. But it gets better! The SIM cards this particular company was using for the GPS function had unlimited data, so I began to tether off of the Barnacle's connection. It took them several months to disconnect the service.

Amazing

No the fuck we can't. Because last I checked humans don't own the fucking ocean, and last I checked, they're IMPORTANT apex predators, a super necessary part of the ecosystem. Not to mention NEW YORKERS bite 10x as many people as sharks do a year. More people die from lightning and fireworks than form sharks.

Sharks aren't a problem. They never have been. People are.

jeza-red Follow

if you swim where the sharks are, it's on you buddy, the animal gotta eat you don't gotta swim

miasmicsiren Follow

To @keyhollow let sharks die naturally, don't go hunting them. Last I checked there's no such thing as an important apex predator. Why on Earth are New Yorkers biting people? Know what we did to lightning? We found ways to deal with them. I'd say firework damage is usually from stupidity.

To @jeza-red so nobody can enjoy the beach now. The animal doesn't got to eat innocent bystanders that are definitely not fish.

keyhollow Follow

I'm gonna ignore 95% of that and focus on the apex predator part.

They're super important because they control prey animal populations, of prey animal populations get out of control it can heavily and possibly irreversibly damage flora, other fauna, and land. A keystone predator is literally irreplaceable

miasmicsiren Follow

A "keystone predator" is nowhere near irreplaceable.

keyhollow Follow

Do you know what keystone means??

miasmicsiren Follow

First off, calling something a keystone predator is erroneous at best. Second, keystones can be replaced.

keyhollow Follow

No

A keystone species is a species that has a disproportionately large effect on its natural environment relative to its abundance. Such species are described as playing a critical role in maintaining the structure of an ecological community, affecting many other organisms in an ecosystem and helping to determine the types and numbers of various other species in the community. A keystone species is a plant or animal that plays a unique and crucial role in the way an ecosystem functions. Without keystone species, the ecosystem would be dramatically different or cease to exist altogether. Some keystone species, such as the wolf, are also apex predators.

The role that a keystone species plays in its ecosystem is analogous to the role of a keystone in an arch. While the keystone is under the least pressure of any of the stones in an arch, the arch still collapses without it. Similarly, an ecosystem may experience a dramatic shift if a keystone species is removed, even though that species was a small part of the ecosystem by measures of biomass or productivity. It became a popular concept in conservation biology, alongside flagship and umbrella species. Although the concept is valued as a descriptor for particularly strong inter-species interactions, and it has allowed easier communication between ecologists and conservation policy-makers, it has been

You literally just have no idea what you're talking about.

Therapist: Exactly.

Me: You're as bad as me with human interactions Jerome, y'know.

Therapist: Were you really going to your friend…?

Me: Yes?? Why else would I be here?

Therapist: A lot of drug deals happen in this street and I see often teenagers and young adults coming and buy stuffs. I was a bit worried for you.

annoyedlord

Me, at 2pm: I'm sorry I'm going to be late!

Therapist: Your appointment was this morning at 11:30am, Damien.

Me:

Me: What.

annoyedlord

Jerome is still not aware of his fame and idk how to announce him.

annoyedlord

Therapist; What's up with you and wanting domestic rats.

Me: I'm gonna get a rat and call him Jerome just to piss you off.

Therapist:

hot take when mordred killed arthur he wasn't betraying arthur, he was betraying merlin think about it. arthur is one of the few people that have shown mordred kindness for nothing in return. he defied his own father to get mordred to safety. mordred hero worshiped arthur. why the fuck would he kill him??

before we jump to bad writing, let's think about merlin. how merlin constantly set him up for death. how any kindness showed was through gritted teeth at best. i will never forget this emrys, and i will never forgive.

how princess mithian, in camelot for days at most, noticed the bond between arthur and merlin. how mordred assumedly had a front seat to their friendship for months.

when kara died, it wasn't because of arthur. mordred already knew that if arthur got hold of kara, she would be sentenced to death. mordred had no reason to be vengeful of arthur if he wasn't before. what he wasn't anticipating was for merlin to play a major part in her capture and execution, and try to get him as well for extra measure.

mordred was one of arthur's most trusted knights. he could have given morgana the maps to seige tunnels, he could have given her royal secrets, he could have told her everything about camelot's weaponry and how to defeat them.

instead, the first piece of information that mordred gave morgana? i know who emrys is. his first action was to expose merlin. not endanger arthur. merlin.

mordred killed arthur because he knew it would break merlin. he smiled because he knew what he was doing to merlin, even if he'd never get to see it.

mordred killed arthur because merlin took away the love of mordred's life, and he wanted merlin to feel that very same pain.

Gold Inlaid Bracelet of Queen Ahhotep

This bracelet of Queen Ahhotep is formed with two semicircles. Gold and lapis lazuli were used to create its beautiful two-color decoration.

The right semicircle depicts Geb, the god of earth, wearing the double crown and seated on the throne. His hands rest on a sign of protection that is on the shoulder and arm of the king kneeling before him.

The other half of the bracelet is engraved with a falcon and a jackal-headed figure representing the souls of Pe and Nekhen, the mythical ancestors of the rulers of Egypt before unification.

From Dra' Abu el-Naga', West Thebes. Second Intermediate Period, 17th Dynasty, ca. 1560-1530 BC. Now in the Egyptian Museum, Cairo. JE 4684

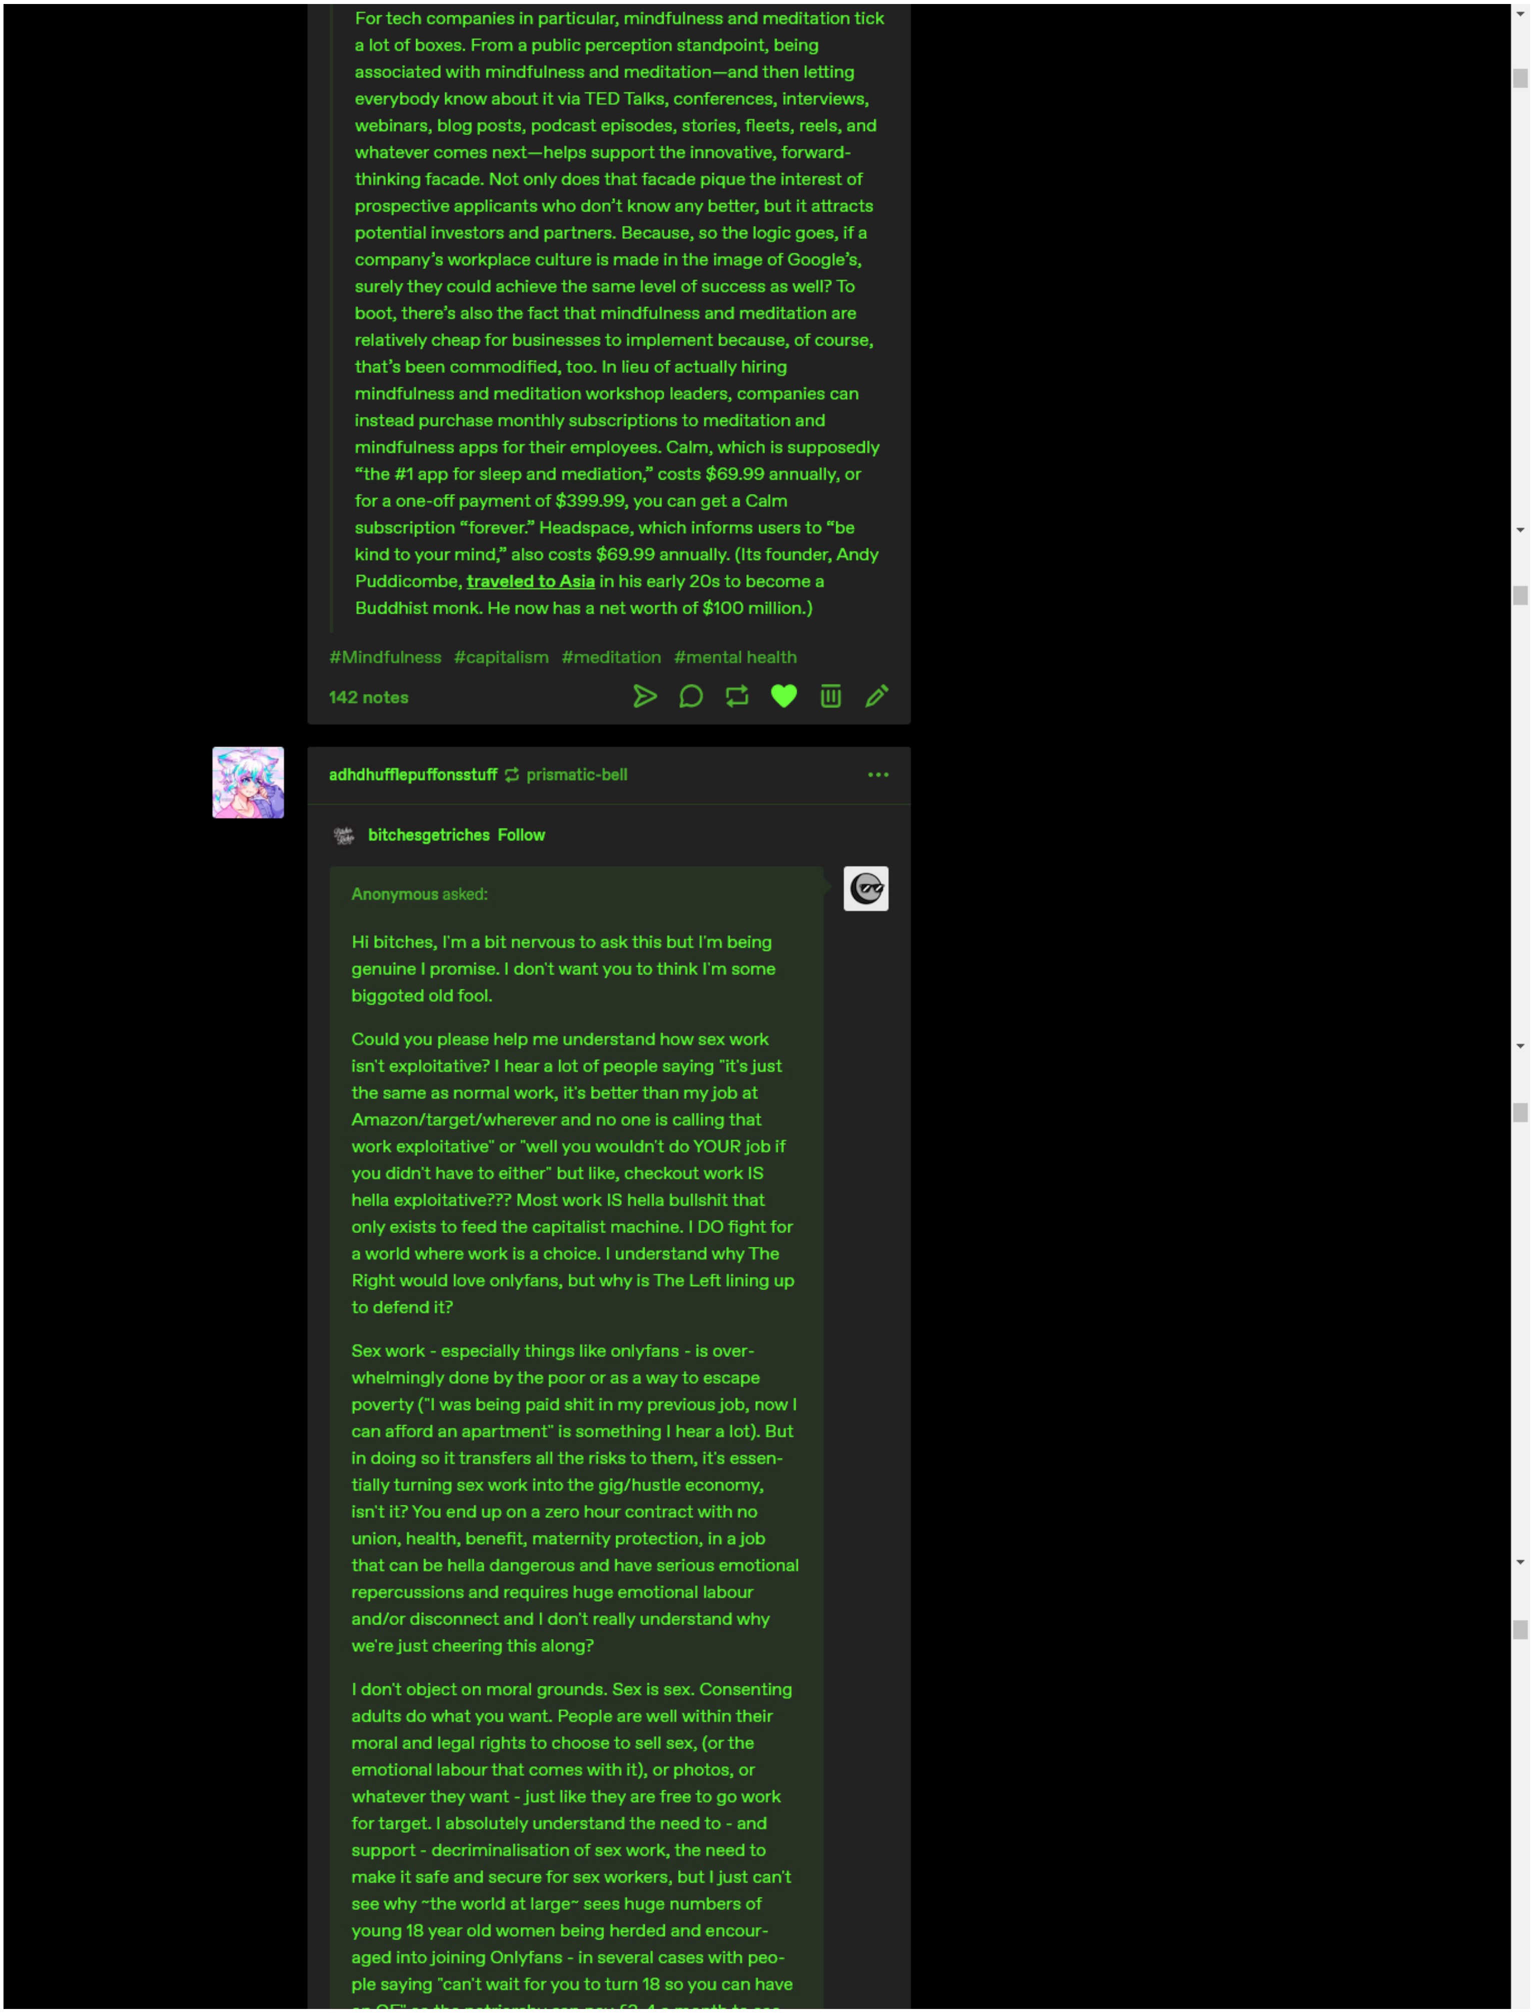
Corporate 'Mindfulness' Programs Are an Abomination

Instead of providing employees with decent working conditions or benefits, U.S. companies suggest they meditate instead.

WWW.CURRENTAFFAIRS.ORG | CURRENT AFFAIRS



> For tech companies in particular, mindfulness and meditation tick a lot of boxes. From a public perception standpoint, being associated with mindfulness and meditation—and then letting everybody know about it via TED Talks, conferences, interviews, webinars, blog posts, podcast episodes, stories, fleets, reels, and whatever comes next—helps support the innovative, forward-thinking facade. Not only does that facade pique the interest of prospective applicants who don't know any better, but it attracts potential investors and partners. Because, so the logic goes, if a company's workplace culture is made in the image of Google's, surely they could achieve the same level of success as well? To boot, there's also the fact that mindfulness and meditation are relatively cheap for businesses to implement because, of course, that's been commodified, too. In lieu of actually hiring mindfulness and meditation workshop leaders, companies can instead purchase monthly subscriptions to meditation and mindfulness apps for their employees. Calm, which is supposedly "the #1 app for sleep and mediation," costs $69.99 annually, or for a one-off payment of $399.99, you can get a Calm subscription "forever." Headspace, which informs users to "be kind to your mind," also costs $69.99 annually. (Its founder, Andy Puddicombe, traveled to Asia in his early 20s to become a Buddhist monk. He now has a net worth of $100 million.)

Anonymous asked:

Hi bitches, I'm a bit nervous to ask this but I'm being genuine I promise. I don't want you to think I'm some biggoted old fool.

Could you please help me understand how sex work isn't exploitative? I hear a lot of people saying "it's just the same as normal work, it's better than my job at Amazon/target/wherever and no one is calling that work exploitative" or "well you wouldn't do YOUR job if you didn't have to either" but like, checkout work IS hella exploitative??? Most work IS hella bullshit that only exists to feed the capitalist machine. I DO fight for a world where work is a choice. I understand why The Right would love onlyfans, but why is The Left lining up to defend it?

Sex work - especially things like onlyfans - is overwhelmingly done by the poor or as a way to escape poverty ("I was being paid shit in my previous job, now I can afford an apartment" is something I hear a lot). But in doing so it transfers all the risks to them, it's essentially turning sex work into the gig/hustle economy, isn't it? You end up on a zero hour contract with no union, health, benefit, maternity protection, in a job that can be hella dangerous and have serious emotional repercussions and requires huge emotional labour and/or disconnect and I don't really understand why we're just cheering this along?

I don't object on moral grounds. Sex is sex. Consenting adults do what you want. People are well within their moral and legal rights to choose to sell sex, (or the emotional labour that comes with it), or photos, or whatever they want - just like they are free to go work for target. I absolutely understand the need to - and support - decriminalisation of sex work, the need to make it safe and secure for sex workers, but I just can't see why ~the world at large~ sees huge numbers of young 18 year old women being herded and encouraged into joining Onlyfans - in several cases with people saying "can't wait for you to turn 18 so you can have an OF" so the patriarchy can pay £3-4 a month to see their tits and people cheer this along? One or two get rich, I'm sure, but who is getting REALLY rich? It's the old white men that own onlyfans and take a 20% cut, as always. It's the patriarchy working as it always has. Allowing one or two women to succeed while holding the rest down for exploitation. Except now it's mixing with the worst bits of 21st C capitalism, too. Surely all OnlyFans is is Uber for Sex work, using the gig economy to de-unionise and isolate workers, strip them of benefits, make them into independent contractors and profit off them?

Sure, it's a step up from kidnapping girls from Romania to have them do porn, but is that really the bar? Can we maybe just stop for a second and imagine a world where rich white men don't get richer off the emotional and physical labour of women? Where the other available work options aren't so shit that a zero-hour career with no employment protections, a limited lifespan, in a dangerous industry doesnt look like heaven in comparison? Sure, you can work for three years, sell your emotional labour, and pay for college. But why are we cheering that instead of asking why this has to happen in the first place? We're fiddling around the edges of the system, giving it a makeover, and rebadging it "female empowerment" instead of actually changing anything fundamental. Poor women sell sex. A few are allowed to break out. Men get to leer at naked women for pennies a year. Rich men get richer. Plus ça change. Not even to mention that because of the ~emotional~ connection that onlyfans gives beyond porn, we're embedding the idea that women are "money in, girlfriend out" machines. I know several girls that won't even talk to men in any situation without a minimum $50 fee. And apparently the fact we also have a crisis of men so lonely they're willing to pay this isn't a problem either? Where's our luxury communism dreams bitches?

Bitches, I trust you. What am I missing?

bitchesgetriches answered:

I don't think you're a bigoted old fool. Nor a prude! I think you're incredibly enlightened about the dangers of unfettered capitalism and labor exploitation.

Almost all of the issues you highlight about exploitative sex work can be said about exploitative labor in any industry. Poor people taking shitty jobs that don't pay enough and enrich capitalist, patriarchal corporate overlords? That happens all over the world in industries from meat packing to clothing sweat shops to, yes, sex work. The exploitation of a person's body for labor is an ethical stain on our culture at large. It's why we're so in favor of labor rights advances including a higher minimum wage, unions, and humane work environments.

- Raising the Minimum Wage Would Make Our Lives Better
- Are Unions Good or Bad?
- Coronavirus Reveals America's Pre-existing Conditions, Part 1: Healthcare, Housing, and Labor Rights

Sex work is not unique in that it opens desperate and poor people up to labor exploitation. It's not even uniquely dangerous to the bodies of workers--John Oliver did a bit on the US meat packing industry recently that made me faint with body horror.

So we agree that labor exploitation is bad. And it's something that we should work towards ending in every industry. But I can see why some people would view exploitative sex work to be a different kind of bad. Because sex is sensitive! It can be used to punish and cause sex is sensitive. It can be used to punish and hurt. See revenge porn and the way synonyms for "sex worker" are stigmatized and used as insults throughout society.

Now, a few clarifications. When I refer to sex work, I'm not just talking about cam work on OnlyFans. There are lots of other outlets for many different kinds of sex work. And I'm also not just talking about women sex workers. People of all gender identities and sexualities do sex work, and we should advocate for fair labor practices and safety for all of them. I am firmly pro- decriminalizing sex work so that the industry can be made safe, regulated, and destigmatized in an effort to reduce exploitation. I want sex workers to have the power of collective bargaining! I want them to be protected by law enforcement and our justice system, instead of targeted by it! I want them to pay taxes and have the privileges associated with all tax paying workers! I want them to have the power and protection of a regulatory industry that will purge abusive and violent clients from their field!

I also disagree with the characterization that choosing sex work freely, even out of desperation, is a "step up from kidnapping a girl from Romania to have them do porn." Human trafficking is not sex work. It's slavery and torture. Even when the choice is between making $7.25 an hour working at WalMart and making $7.25 as a cam girl, there's still a choice involved, even if it's a shitty one. There's consent. Trafficking victims have no choice, no consent, only violence.

I honestly don't want to start a debate here. We're all on the same page that labor exploitation is bad. So I'll just end with this: not all sex work is inherently exploitative. Which I guess is your real question!

I've mentioned before that I have friends who are former sex workers. Specifically strippers and a specialty dominatrix. As with any job, they had their ups and downs, their good nights and bad nights. But they all agree that they freely chose the work not out of desperation or a lack of other options. And they even enjoyed the work in some cases. If someone prefers sex work, thrives in giving that emotional labor to others, I'm not going to judge and I'm certainly not going to tell them they're being exploited. It would frankly be insulting, condescending, to tell someone that their choice of work (when it truly is a choice) is bad for them.

It's a fine line, but the line does exist. Sex work CAN BE exploitative. But it is not inherently exploitative, as far as I'm concerned.

Like we all know fantasy names are unusual, but any name to a foreign culture is considered unusual English names to Indian people are very unusual for example. But naturally, given that it's an entire culture, there will be some common names, it'd be refreshing to at one point here this exchange.

The article about the guy with three tv's in his living room was low-key horrifying, but the idea that this shit is being normalized is straight up, right-out-front horrifying. Easily identified, inarguable horror. Even if the people in question are "okay" with it (and in this instance I'd bet "okay with it" has much more to do with not really thinking about the ramifications of what's happening) that first instinct quoted above is the correct one.

There are various ways to dehumanize people, and one of the most widespread versions of that is by taking away someone's actual, lived experience, their practical humanity in that they are human beings with their own lives and thoughts, and transforming them into pseudo-fictional characters in your own head. Parasocial relationships is a term that's been brought up a lot more than ever in the past two years, but the bottom line is that convincing yourself that it's okay to treat actual people as if they're fictional characters you have some semblance of control over is fucking horrifying. And dehumanizing. You're discarding people's actual agency for the sake of your own emotional/personal edification. You're seeking some sort of emotional connection in a literal void. You're collecting your personal interpretation of what a person IS to you, and then USING IT for your own purposes.

This is not an exercise that should meet with approval or acceptance. It's mentally unhealthy and can be (and often has become) damaging to the subjects in question, because once you stop reminding yourself that you don't actually KNOW any of these people, that you've never talked to them, don't hang out with them, don't know anyone who knows anyone who knows anyone who has even been in the same ROOM with these folks, you give yourself permission to use them as you see fit for your own needs, and that's fucked up. This is how and why so much of the last 20 years of awful exchanges online are allowed to happen – because it's been normalized by our culture to treat other people on the other side of our "conversations" online as NOT REAL. Not in the way we consider our OWN lives to be "real."

Other people aren't imaginary. That they show up on your favorite streams doesn't make them fictional characters. And writing fanfiction about real people is disturbing shit.

i wish people could be less "all or nothing" when it comes to accessibility efforts. by that i mean, of course it's important that everything be made accessible. but i feel like some people get caught up in that mentality and decide "well, i can't possibly make everything around me accessible, so i'll do nothing instead."

writing one image description is better than writing none. writing a very brief image description is better than writing none. providing transcripts for new episodes of your podcast moving forward is better than never providing any at all. making something slightly more accessible according to your own ability and resources is so, so much better than doing nothing!

I personally wanna see less 'you are not a burden/it's not work to love you' and more 'you are worth the work it takes to love you.' I KNOW I'm a burden sometimes. that isn't such a terrible thing! humans are strong. we can carry burdens. and it is work for me to be there for my friends, but it's work I'm willing to do.

we need to acknowledge this because pretending love isn't work will never make people like me feel less guilty for accepting love. we need to talk about it so people don't feel bad for having boundaries and not always being up to do the work. we need to accept it so we can properly appreciate what others do for us and what we're doing for them.

yes it does take work to love you. but guess what? you still deserve love, and you deserve people who are willing to do the work to love you. it doesn't make you bad. all love take work. and everyone is worth it.

At lunchtime I bought a huge orange—

The size of it made us all laugh.

I peeled it and shared it with Robert and Dave—

They got quarters and I had a half.

And that orange, it made me so happy,

As ordinary things often do

Just lately. The shopping. A walk in the park.

This is peace and contentment. It's new.

The rest of the day was quite easy.

I did all the jobs on my list

And enjoyed them and had some time over.

I love you. I'm glad I exist.

tropes that will always f*ck me up

- composed characters losing their composure
- kind characters snapping
- characters hugging each other after one or both of them have been through hell
- character cradling their significant other's face while they kiss
- character says something hurtful. later on in the movie they are in a similar situation and say something kind instead.
- self sacrifice
- griefstricken women (who under normal circumstances wouldn't hurt a fly) lashing out and striking the person responsible for the loss of their loved one
- ugly crying
- characters struggling to talk because they're about to cry
- characters reuniting with someone whom they thought were dead

If you don't wanna date a trans person then just don't date a trans person. The thing we're mad about is people treating us like we have cooties, people that are attracted to us feeling ashamed of their attraction, and people being terrible to us. Not whether or not you personally find us attractive. Jesus. We ask to be recognized as the gender we are and people are like "Oh yeah? Well I don't wanna have sex with you!"

Okay? Do you just walk up to everyone you don't wanna have sex with and tell them that? Just walk up to random people and let them know that you think they're unattractive? You must be real fun at parties.

State Republicans have in recent weeks advanced a spate of proposals that would restrict access to the ballot box, a move voting rights experts warned was coming after President Joe Biden's win.

State lawmakers are considering more than 100 laws that would make it harder to vote, according to an analysis conducted by the Brennan Center for Justice at New York University School of Law. This number represents almost triple the number of similarly restrictive bills under consideration this time last year, according to the analysis.

States are sized by the number of congressional districts they are projected to have after the 2020 census, based on Election Data Services's apportionment estimates.

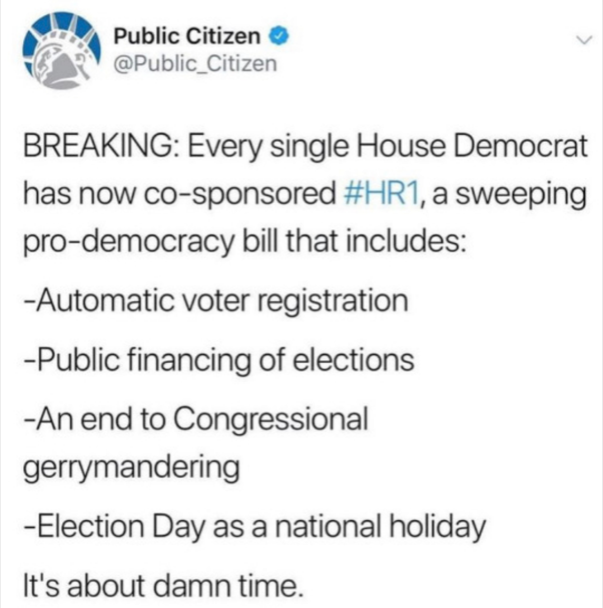
FiveThirtyEight SOURCES: ELECTION DATA SERVICES, NCSL, DAILY KOS, NEWS STORIES

In case you were wondering what Republicans have been up to since losing the 2020 election, it's doubling down on voter suppression - a blatant attempt to lock in minority rule and ensure that they never lose again, even though their party and positions are getting less and less popular.

Experts predict that Republicans could take back the House in 2022 through gerrymandering alone. That has dire implications - with the House, they could unjustly impeach Joe Biden and prevent any progressive legislation from passing, among other things. In the nightmare scenario where they win back both the House and Senate, our democracy is effectively over. Not being dramatic. Republicans are openly opposed to majority rule and fair elections. They will not make the mistake of allowing everyone a free and fair election ever again if they regain power.

So what do we do?

First, support HR.1, the For the People Act, a bill that has already passed the House.



Public Citizen
@Public_Citizen

BREAKING: Every single House Democrat has now co-sponsored #HR1, a sweeping pro-democracy bill that includes:

-Automatic voter registration

-Public financing of elections

-An end to Congressional gerrymandering

-Election Day as a national holiday

It's about damn time.

Next:

- Fight like hell to keep the House and Senate in 2022,

- Support abolishing the filibuster so Democrats can pass bills to protect voting rights, and

- Organize and volunteer.

I'm all in on our current fights - passing the $15 minimum wage and ending the filibuster - but don't lose sight of the fact that we can't even have those fights if Republicans get their way.

Voting rights must be our top priority in 2022 and beyond.

Hey, just a heads up to everyone who follows my blog: if you see anybody with an orange and black square in their bio, they're a transphobe.

Idiots on TikTok have been coming out in droves in support of some bullshit identity called "super straight" which basically means that they're only attracted to cis people 🙄 They're trying to wedge themselves into the LGBTQ+ community and their claim is that it's phobic toward them to say that they're transphobic… it's just a gargantuan cishet headache.

So, to reiterate: orange and black squares = the "super straight" flag = transphobic dogwhistle. Stay safe everyone!

arcanecadenza Follow

People have been pointing out additional things in the replies of this post and I'll summarize them here because it's important!

- This isn't something that only cishet people are doing, there are cis lesbians, cis gay men, and cis bi people who have been labelling themselves "super (insert sexual orientation)" and I've seen a couple of them on Tumblr already when I went digging in the tags for more information. Please, for your own safety and mental wellbeing, just block them immediately.
- Although it is now rampant on TikTok and Twitter (I believe), "super straight" originated on 4chan and it is a gigantic Nazi dogwhistle in addition to being transphobic as fuck. Basically, the term can be abbreviated to "SS" which is also short for Schutzstaffel (a paramilitary organization under Hitler in Nazi Germany). The colours of the "super straight" flag are also the colours of a specific Nazi flag.

These people are extremely bad news. Please block them if you see them.

I want to make an addition!

If you're reading this post, or about the subject another thing you can do aside from spreading, blocking, educating yourself and deconstructing biases, etc., etc., is donate to Trans people or Trans mutual aid funds if you're able.

Examples like The Okra Project, the Trans Women of Colour Collective, the BlkTransFutures collective, Black and Pink, the FTEF, the Black Trans Travel Fund, the BFTA collective, the LGBTQ Freedom Fund, or the Marsha P. Johnson Institute.

These are literally only some of the available options out there. There's also different transition funds and donation lists around Tumblr that are organised by trans people (tpoc specially) to help each other and that you can donate, too.

Transphobia isn't just TERFs outing themselves as Nazis once again, transphobia is also the unsustantiability of trans life by altering the conditions which would otherwise allow us to live — specially of trans people of colour.

Here is another post with many other alternatives.

This is also a time for standing with Jewish trans people, listening to them, and learning from them and standing by them. I, personally, don't know specific coalitions or groups where you can donate or find other ways to support them. Of course, I'll personally keep looking, but if you have some, make them circulate.

Fuck TERFs, fuck Nazis, block them and ridicule them but most importantly stand in solidarity with the groups which are the most affected by transphobia and Nazism.

The thing that gets me about most arguments against accessibility features in video games is that they're not just grossly ableist, they're also hypocritical as hell. Video games have always had accessibility features: we just documented them poorly and called them "cheat codes". Indeed, having a robust library of difficulty-modifying cheats was considered a mark in a game's favour! The only difference is that a cheat code is theoretically a secret, which allows it to be framed as elite knowledge, even though it's functionally identical to having an "infinite lives" switch on the options screen.

Here's a thesis for you: the Konami Code was the first well-publicised accessibility feature.

bog-dweller-official

being bad at video games is a disability now?

prokopetz Follow

I'm going to assume you're not being disingenuous here and take this as a serious question. In brief, very few people are generically "bad at video games"; in most cases, difficulty engaging with interactive media stems from one or more of a wide range of physiological conditions, including:

- visual deficit (including colourbindness; colourblind individuals often have difficulty identifying threats in action games because they don't stand out from the background for them)
- repetitive strain injury in the hands, wrists or forearms (common for anyone who performs manual labour for a living)
- arthritis and other degenerative joint conditions (both those due to age and those comorbid with many autoimmune disorders)
- dyslexia (a common symptom of even mild dyslexia is the inadvertent mirroring of sensory-motor responses under pressure, e.g., moving your hand left when you meant to move it right - which is a big problem for action games!)
- sensory processing disorders (delayed reaction to visual stimulus is a common symptom)
- spatial processing disorders (see above)
- chronic pain
- propensity for motion sickness

This is, of course, only a partial list. Many of these issues are individually rare, but taken together, we're looking a huge chunk of the population - up to 40%, by some estimates - who have at least one condition that would impact their ability to play the shooters and action-platformers that are held up as the gold standard for hardcore gaming.

bog-dweller-official

hot tip: if your disability makes you bad at a thing, maybe either put in the extra effort to get good at it or just don't do it instead of demanding people make the thing easier?????

prokopetz Follow

Here's the a better question: why is it an issue for you? Accessibility features in video games are entirely transparent to those who choose not to use them. Your experience of play isn't affected by their existence in any way whatsoever unless you deliberately turn them on. Complaining about the mere existence of such features is like claiming that your viewing experience of a movie is being ruined by the fact that the disc has a subtitle feature on it, even though you haven't actually turned subtitles on.

(And no, don't try to frame this as video game developers somehow being victimised by unreasonable demands. The vast majority of developers are more than happy to include accessibility features in their games - and quite sensibly, because, you know, they're businesspeople, and they want to sell things to as wide an audience as possible. The popular backlash against accessibility features is entirely on the player side.)

I've seen a bunch of viral tweets about boycotting Amazon in solidarity with the warehouse workers in Alabama. To be clear, the union involved in the election @RWDSU has NOT called for a boycott and has nothing to do with this, a spokesperson confirms.

11:53 AM · Mar 7, 2021 · Twitter for iPhone

Hey so just so everyone knows, the union that's helping the Amazon workers in Alabama organize has explicitly NOT called for a boycott and has no involvement with the posts going around promoting one.

This boycott was something put together by people who don't at all work at Amazon and has the potential to create more negative effects for the workers than positive.

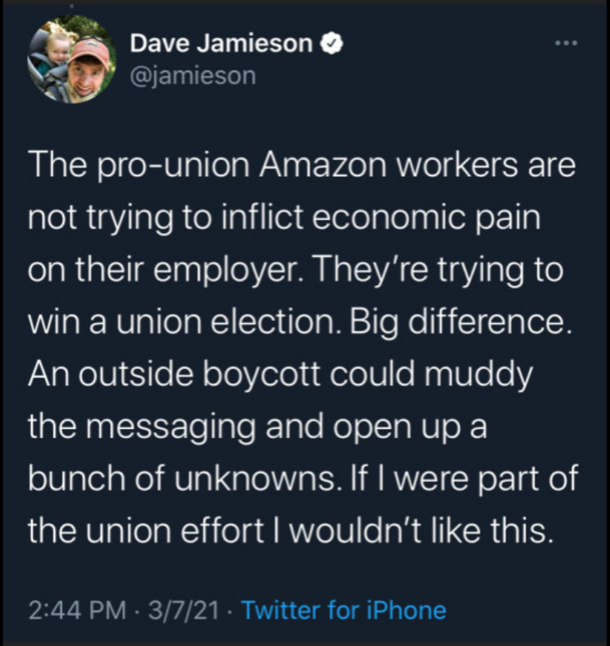
Organizing a union is very serious business, and we can't take a chance that might fuck up the work actual Amazon employees are doing to better their lives for the sake of a retweet, you know?

As they say, "Don't do for the workers what they can do for themselves." We do not help form unions by putting things like this together without communication and creating dynamics for the workers that they never intended to exist - we help workers by asking directly what they need and helping them with it.

This is not that.

Please spread this around so folks know.

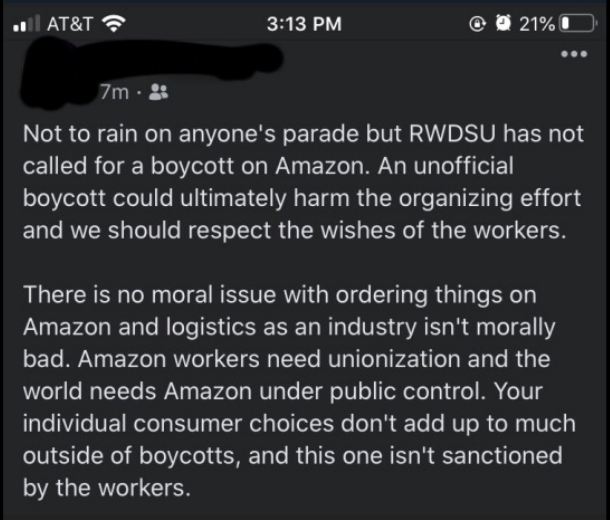
leninistbutch Follow



Dave Jamieson
@jamieson

The pro-union Amazon workers are not trying to inflict economic pain on their employer. They're trying to win a union election. Big difference. An outside boycott could muddy the messaging and open up a bunch of unknowns. If I were part of the union effort I wouldn't like this.

2:44 PM · 3/7/21 · Twitter for iPhone



[redacted]
7m ·

Not to rain on anyone's parade but RWDSU has not called for a boycott on Amazon. An unofficial boycott could ultimately harm the organizing effort and we should respect the wishes of the workers.

There is no moral issue with ordering things on Amazon and logistics as an industry isn't morally bad. Amazon workers need unionization and the world needs Amazon under public control. Your individual consumer choices don't add up to much outside of boycotts, and this one isn't sanctioned by the workers.

A little bit more elaboration on why this could cause much more harm than good. The second post is taken from one of my local comrades that I've been working with for a while now - they're an actual Amazon warehouse employee so listen to them if nothing else.

gothiccharmschool Follow

- This is important information. Support the workers the way they ask.

But also beware that some producers have made up their own certificates, with no outside oversight. More than 100,000 unemployed New Yorkers have been left out of federal COVID assistance —it's up to Albany lawmakers to fund new programs for survival benefits & rent cancellation.

Hundreds blocked bridges today to demand:

#TaxTheRich
#InvestInOurNY

EXCLUDED WORKERS

3.5.21. New York City

Multiple workers coalitions shut down Brooklyn and Manhattan bridges this morning. NY has denied financial assistance to unemployed and undocumented workers, failed to cancel rent, chooses not to tax the rich, and underfunds public schools.

The government's response to COVID on all levels is now a year-long failure to contain the virus and support workers. Over half a million people nationally were left to die.

milqi

One of my favorite things NYC protests do is bring drums to the marches. Aside from the sick beats people churn out, it's also an amazing unifying force. You can hear the march coming from a long way away. It's a cool experience whether you're in it or hear it coming. It is 100% certain that the drummers from both bridges could hear each other.

nickelodeon

i wish all Nickelodeon

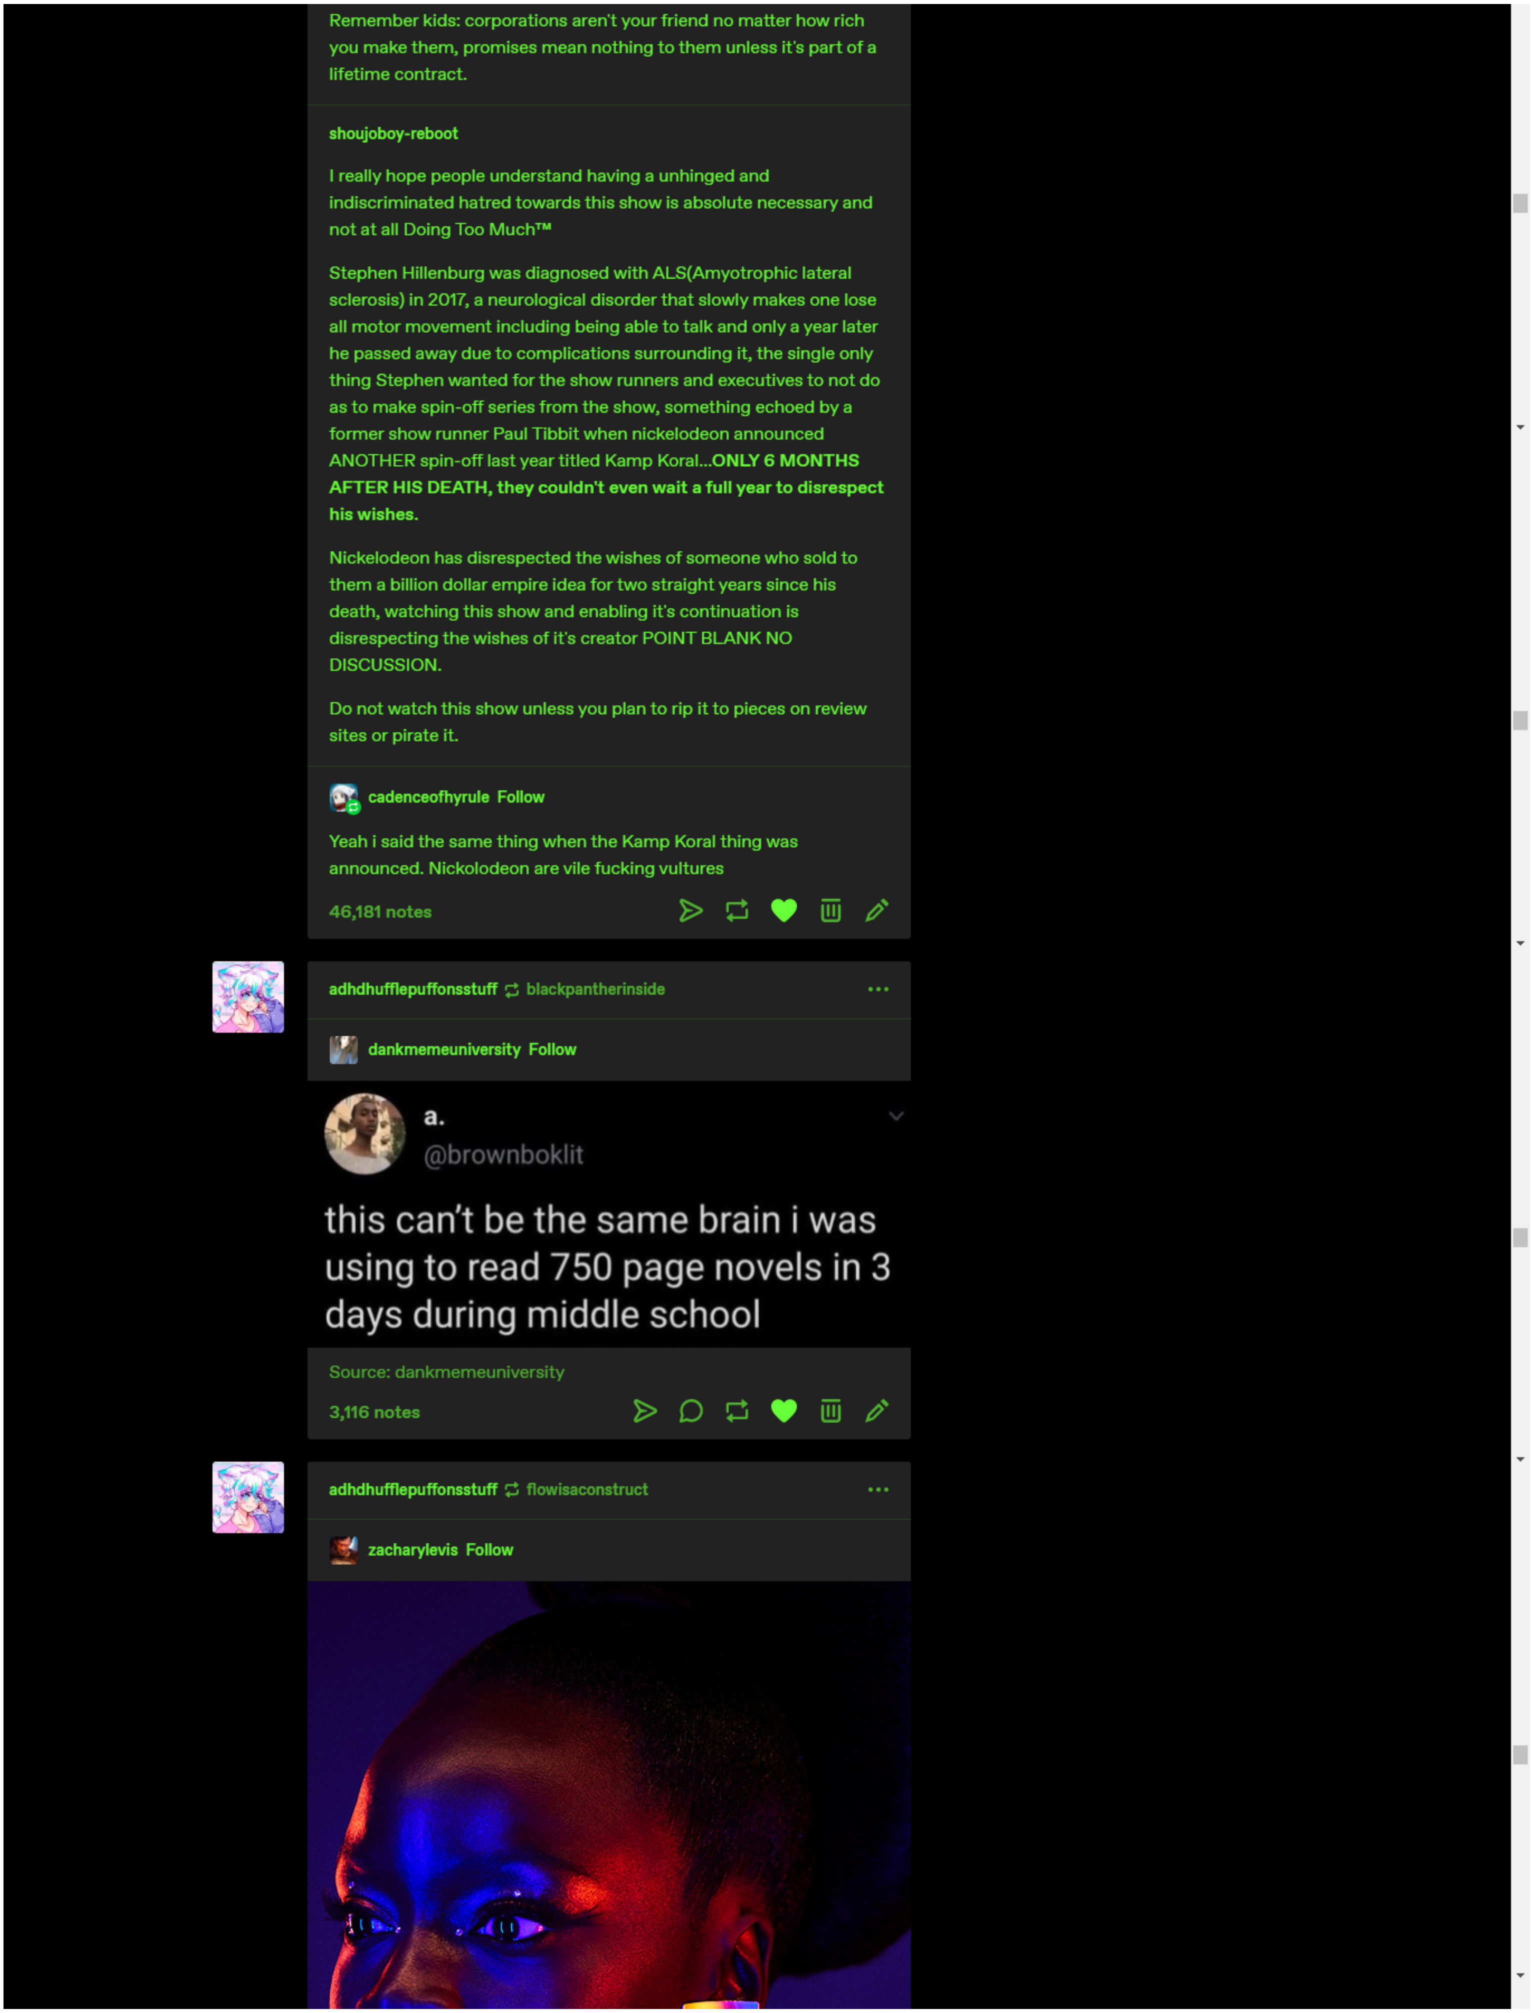
bankruptcy



Remember kids: corporations aren't your friend no matter how rich you make them, promises mean nothing to them unless it's part of a lifetime contract.

shoujoboy-reboot

I really hope people understand having a unhinged and indiscriminated hatred towards this show is absolute necessary and not at all Doing Too Much™

Stephen Hillenburg was diagnosed with ALS(Amyotrophic lateral sclerosis) in 2017, a neurological disorder that slowly makes one lose all motor movement including being able to talk and only a year later he passed away due to complications surrounding it, the single only thing Stephen wanted for the show runners and executives to not do as to make spin-off series from the show, something echoed by a former show runner Paul Tibbit when nickelodeon announced ANOTHER spin-off last year titled Kamp Koral...ONLY 6 MONTHS AFTER HIS DEATH, they couldn't even wait a full year to disrespect his wishes.

Nickelodeon has disrespected the wishes of someone who sold to them a billion dollar empire idea for two straight years since his death, watching this show and enabling it's continuation is disrespecting the wishes of it's creator POINT BLANK NO DISCUSSION.

Do not watch this show unless you plan to rip it to pieces on review sites or pirate it.

sapphic-giraffic Follow

real talk tho, i actually have a strategy for this. it was my wife's idea. the key is to change your default association with the name. that way, instead of automatically thinking of it as your deadname, you think of it as something else's name, ideally something you like.

what I did was start a new game on Pokémon Omega Ruby and give my starter, mudkip, my deadname. after many hours of play time, whenever i hear or see my deadname, i think of my beloved mudkip, now grown into a handsome, strong swampert.

if pokémon isn't ur thing, i think the same strategy could be adapted to a pet or a stuffed animal. just a thought.

Cleobellum moments in season 4 part 2

Warning: may contain spoilers

We should never allow Saira to visit her Himalayan Laboratory without adult supervision.

She simply has too many toys there.

- Do any of you use the words "toys" when describing the fascinations of your friends or people you don't crush on?!

(If you do, maybe my friends and I are the strange ones)

I am merely keeping the Crown warm for Cleo.

- This has the same energy as wearing your s/o's clothes when they're away because it reminds you of them

Again, do you say this stuff about friends? "Keeping the crown warm"?

But have we not witnessed our share of mechanical error today as well?

Oh, how nice, can you please just tell me my Crown is secure?

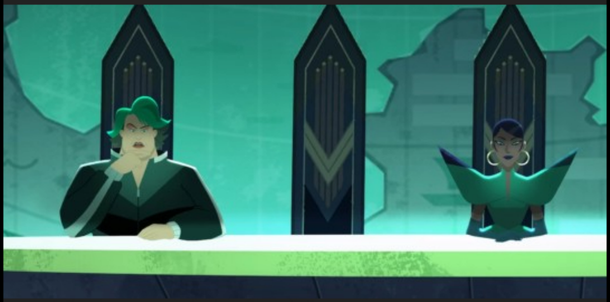
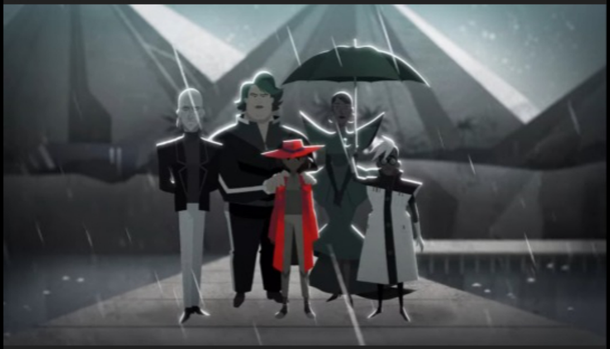
- Cleo teasing and humoring Saira when her character is otherwise completely serious

Also, now we know why Saira wanted to give her the crown so bad. Saira found something for someone she had practically nothing in common with and that person got so excited about it. And then wouldn't stop talking about it when Cleo barely talks unless necessary. On top of that, Saira DEFINITELY has a crush on her

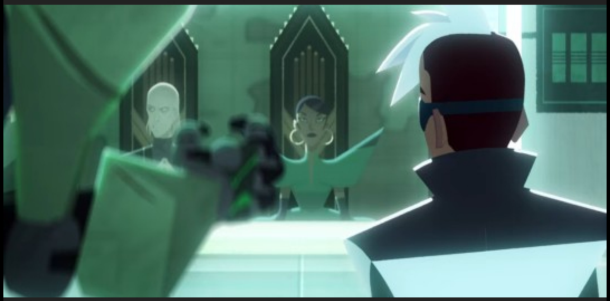


- Cleo is so proud of Saira for wiping and reprogramming Carmen's mind



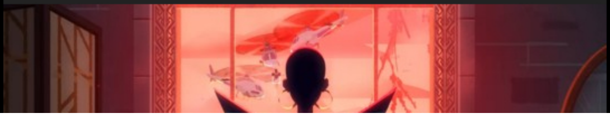
- Saira added the umbrella holding to Carmen's memory and you can't tell me otherwise!

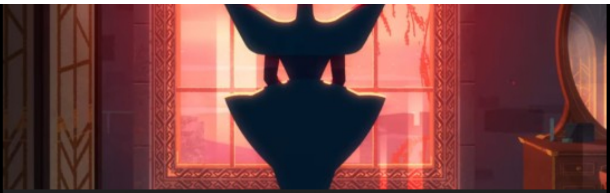
If Saira didn't add it, Maelstrom did and therefore, absolutely ships them



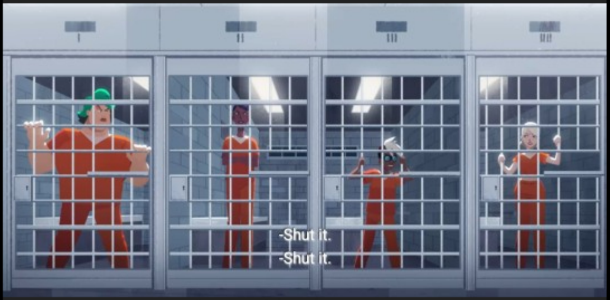
- I might be reaching here, but why does the camera focus only on Cleo?! They could have put the frame anywhere

Of course, the more logical explanation is that they wanted Bellum, the robot and the screen in one scene, but let me have this!





- Cleo watching Saira being captured when she could have been doing literally anything else in this situation



-Shut it.
-Shut it.

- If you feel upset about the faculty being captured, just think about Cleo and Saira being able to communicate without any hindrances now
- I mean, their cells are right beside each other, they do let the prisoners out once in a while, it's only women in the prison...
- Someone write a fanfiction of Cleo and Saira falling in love through late night conversations in prison

If no one does, I will, but it will be terrible and will never see the light of day

I'm tempted to do the best Cleobellum and V.I.L.E faculty moments from other seasons but there aren't as many Cleobellum scenes so, I don't know

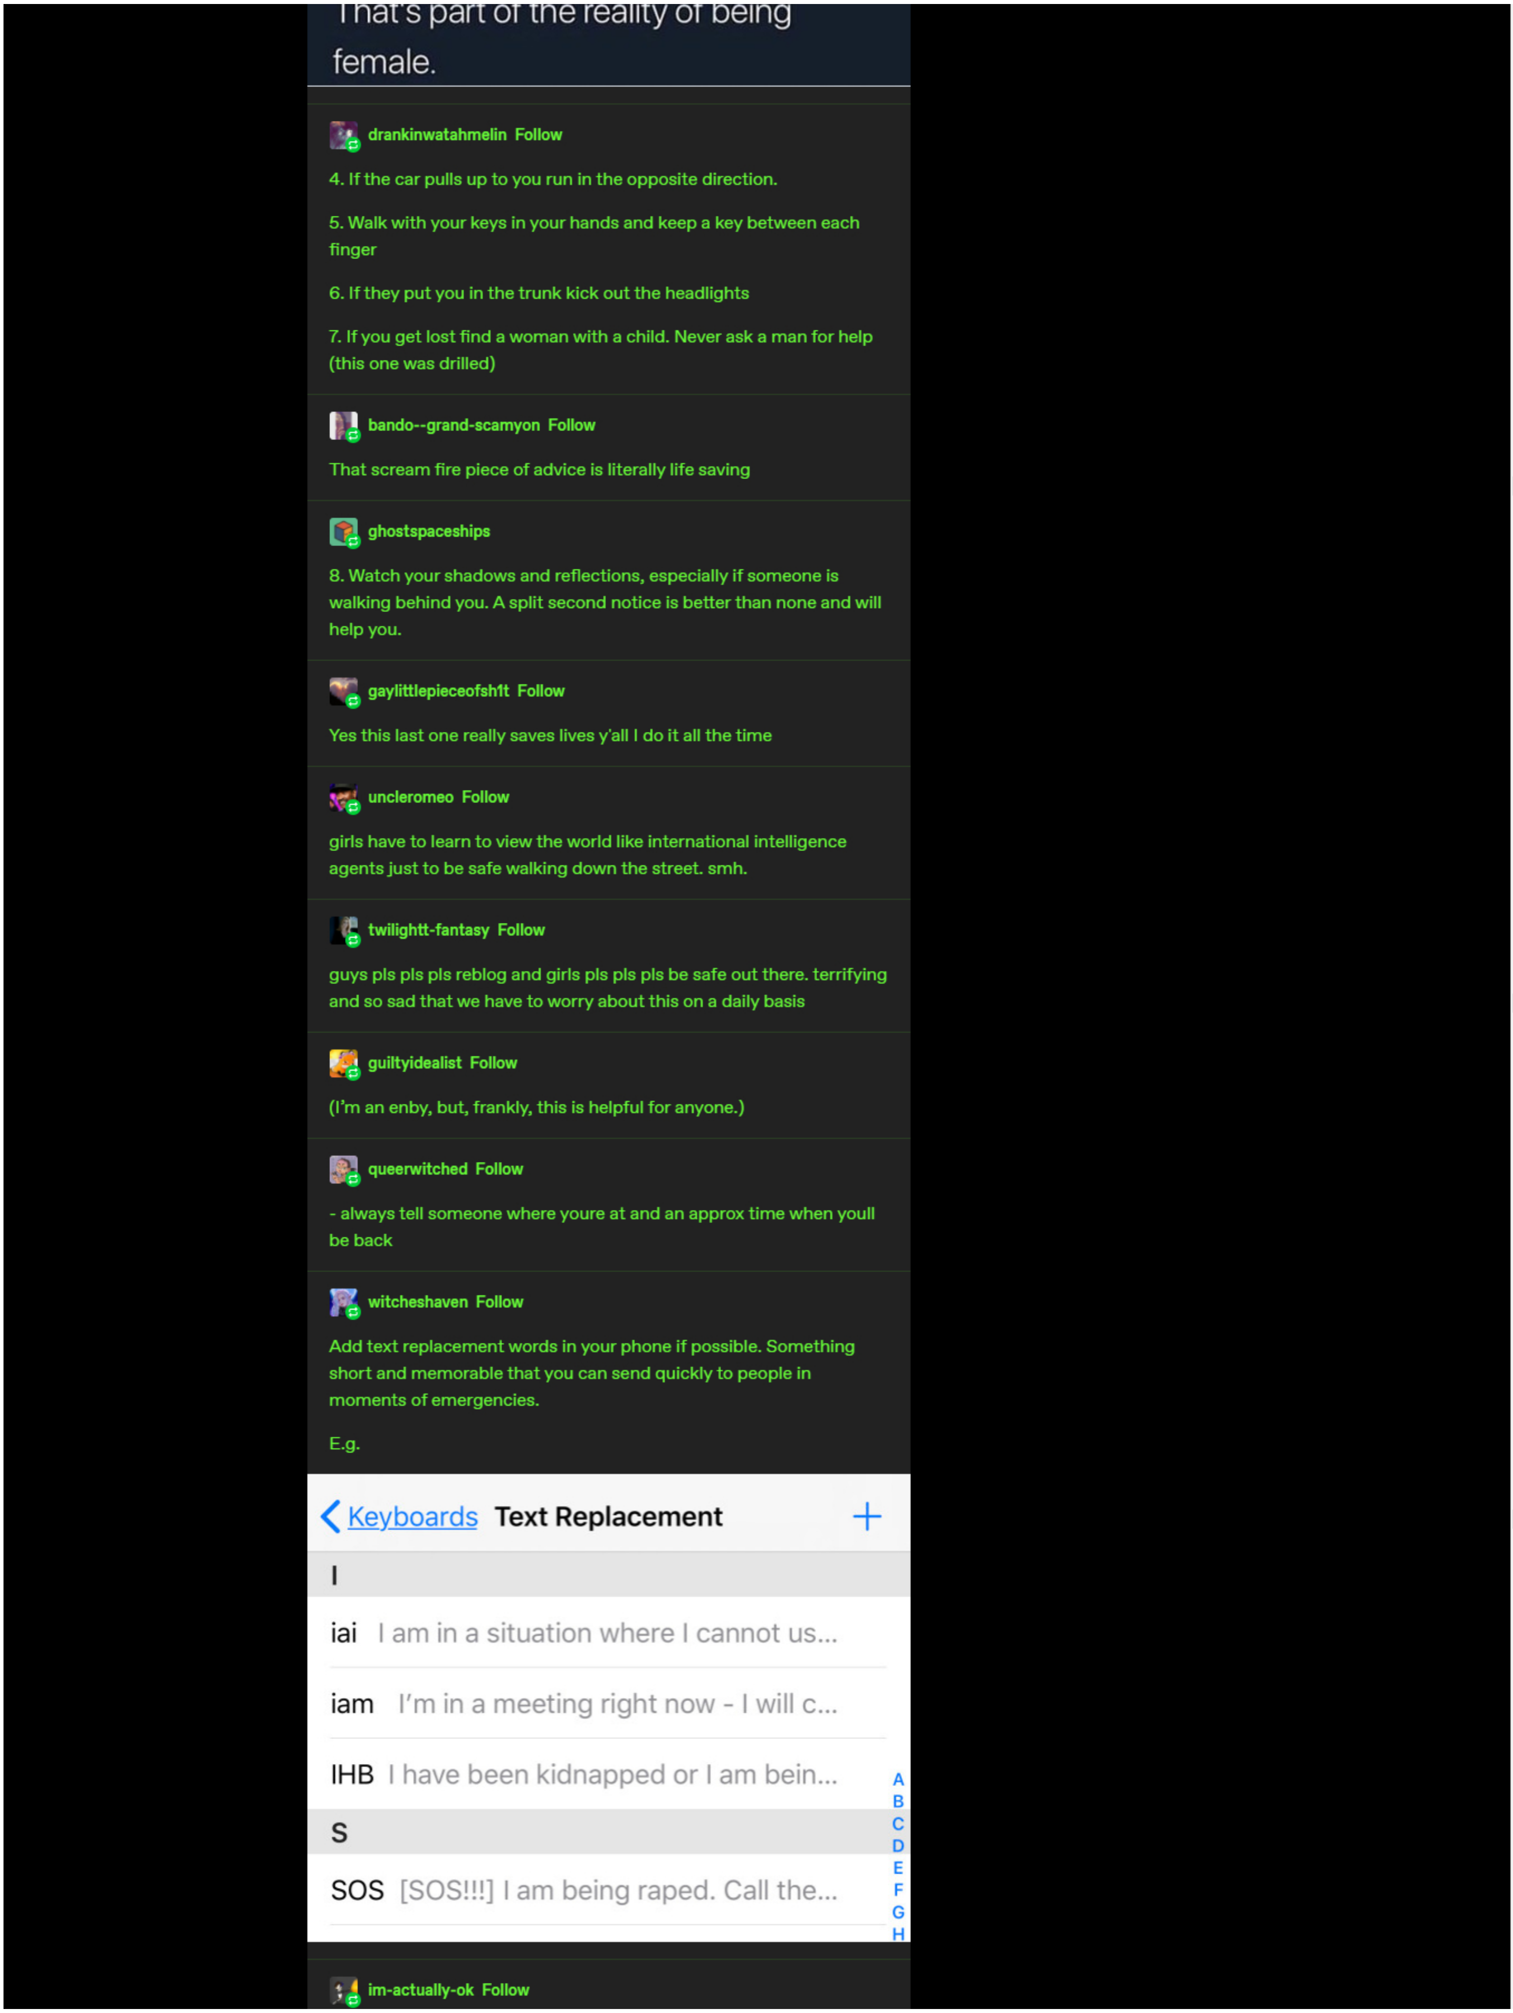
As a little girl, I was taught "life skills" like,
1. Never let them take you to a second location, they'll kill you
2. Act crazy or vomit on them. Men don't like gross girls
3. Don't scream "help", people don't care. Scream "fire"



That's part of the reality of being female.

DO NOT SCROLL PAST

anonymousmothman Follow

Being female fucking sucks but yes this shit is important for everyone

deadlymodern Follow

Also, do not walk close to walls. It will be easier for someone so walk past you and push you against it or corner you.

If your gut is telling you to cross the street or change your path, do it. Don't risk it. Your body knows.

If you can, buy a large umbrella and walk holding it. Studies say that predators are less likely to attempt an attack on someone that could fight back. Keys around your knuckles is fine but you'll need to get very close to do damage. Umbrellas are more precise.

Avoid wearing headphones if you are alone on an empty street. Look aware.

Again: Stay. Away. From. Walls.

Entering an uber alone? Call your father (or anyone you trust) and say "hey dad! Yep, I'm almost there, I'm sending you the route." outloud. Then proceed to send them the route so they can follow the uber drive. This will most likely intimidate the predator.

If you see someone in an uncomfortable or possibly dangerous situation, walk up to them and say "Betty, oh my god, I haven't seen you in so long!". If she gets slightly confused, you can whisper and let her know you're trying to help and that she should follow along. Walk together to another station or away from where you are. The man will most likely not follow. I have done this one 2 times and can be very helpful.

If you are unsure she needs help, you can pass her a note saying something like "hey, I noticed this man beside you is making you uncomfortable. If you'd like help, fake a sneeze right now and I will come up to you and pretend we are friends." This is a long note, but its an example. Be discrete. If she follows along, proceed with the previous tip. This is helpful when you're in a crowded train and you notice harassment.

Help your sisters. Trust them. Trust yourself. Be safe.

no one wants to hear it but love is earned after the initial infatuation. commitment is something u both mutually agree to and then from there it's work. it's not work like it's a chore it's jus work like it takes effort. to get good at these things takes practice. it takes practice to learn to communicate better and it takes practice to learn to love each other in the ways u need to be loved.

And it's also terrifying! Like it's the kind of vulnerability you can't do while being all cool and in control of things, you have to like open up the really awkward, ugly inner part of yourself and hope that the other person is still into you.

Like you have to actually say - with words coming out of your mouth or hands or whatever way you use to directly communicate in person - what you would like from the other person! You have to say stuff like "hey the thing you did made me feel some ways and we have to address this like adults" and hope that the other person says "I see, yes I also think we should address this like adults" (instead of "no I didn't" or "you're overreacting" or other shut-down-ing shit that ruins lives).

Ah, yes but emordnilap is a word!

An emornilap is any word that, when spelled backwards, produces another word. Examples of emordnilap pairs include:

- desserts & stressed
- drawer & reward
- gateman & nametag
- time & emit
- laced & decal
- regal & lager

And therefore "emordnilap palindrome" is an emordnilap palindrome.

Which I, for one, think is really frickin' cool.

Yeah, they have a whole slave population, but nobody wants to talk about that bigwordsandsharpedges

To be clear, they are literally actually slaves. They're property. That exists in the world right now, and we don't do anything because they slavemasters are extremely rich.

mr-downer

They get recruited out of their villages on false promises, and once they get to UAE they have their passports taken away and told they must pay of their debts if they want to go home but like with classic indentured servitude the money they make is meager and their expenses take most of it. These people labor under the hellish summer sun for hours on end just to do it again and again day after day.

msburgundy Follow

this is actually extremely prevalent throughout the world, unfortunately. labor trafficking is a huge part of the agriculture industry in the US (workers will accept below minimum wage pay in unsafe conditions under threat of detainment or deportation for immigration status), Filipinas head to Hong Kong in high numbers for supposed high paying cleaning jobs and then end up trapped on a domestic helper visa barely able to afford rent and unable to go back home, most countries have things in their laws that make foreign workers second class citizens with little to no legal rights. the UAE is definitely one of the worst but this also happens right under our noses every day too.

I know next to nothing about the Addam's Family's greater canon, but the fact that Lurch is visually so strongly based on Frankenstein's Creature makes me so happy, because it's the happy ending the Creature deserves and I can so imagine it? You have the Creature at the end of the novel who is lonely and who has resigned himself that he will never be loved and that all humans will reject him on sight and then he meets the Addam's Family and they are the first ones who don't attack him or run away screaming - they either don't say anything or even more likely, they are high-key excited about a Creature put together from corpses. That's probably the highest Addam's aspiration, to be more than 1 corpse. So they take him in and he has a family for the first time. What a crossover. What over-thinking on my part. I love it.

langernameohnebedeutung Follow

I'm going to add to this that because of the Creature's line "I ought to be thy Adam", many people irl nickname the Creature 'Adam' (being the first of his species) so if he were adopted by the Addam's Family his name would officially be 'Adam Addams" and I can only approve of that.

I am writing to you from the London branch of the Herpetological Society, where I am trying to find out what happened to the reptile collection of Dr. Montgomery Montgomery following the tragic events that occurred while the Baudelaire orphans were in his care.

An associate of mine will place a small waterproof box in the phone both of the Elektra Hotel at 11 P.M next Tuesday. Please retrieve it before midnight to avoid it falling into the wrong hands. In the box you will find my description of these terrible events, entitled THE REPTILE ROOM, as well as a map of Lousy Lane, a copy of the film Zombies in the Snow, and Dr. Montgomery's recipe for coconut cream cake. I have also managed to track down one of the few photographs of Dr. Lucafont, in order to help Mr. Helquist with his illustrations.

Remember, you are my last hope that the tales of the Baudelaire orphans can finally be told to the general public.

I am writing to you from the shores of Lake Lachrymose, where I am examining the remains of Aunt Josephine's house in order to completely understand everything that happened when the Baudelaire orphans found themselves here.

Please go to the Café Kafka at 4 P.M. next Wednesday and order a pot of jasmine tea from the tallest waiter on duty. Unless my enemies have succeeded, he will bring you a large envelope instead. Inside the envelope, you will find my description of these horrific events, entitled THE WIDE WINDOW, as well as a sketch of Curdled Cave, a small bag of shattered glass, and the menu from the Anxious Clown restaurant. There will also be a test tube containing one (1) Lachrymose Leech, so that Mr. Helquist can draw an accurate illustration. UNDER NO CIRCUMSTANCES should this test tube be opened.

Remember, you are my last hope that the tales of the Baudelaire orphans can finally be told to the general public.

To My Kind Editor,

I am writing to you from the Paltryville Town Hall, where I have convinced the mayor to allow me inside the eye-shaped office of Dr. Orwell in order to further investigate what happened to the Baudelaire orphans while they were living in the area.

Next Friday, a black jeep will be in the northwest corner of the parking lot of the Orion Observatory. Break into it. In the glove compartment, you should find my description of this frightening chapter in the Baudelaires' lives, entitled THE MISERABLE MILL, as well as some information on hypnosis, a surgical mask, and sixty-eight sticks of gum. I have also included the blueprint of the pincher machine, which I believe Mr. Helquist will find useful for his illustrations.

To My Kind Editor,

Please excuse the torn edges of this note. I am writing to you from inside the shack the Baudelaire orphans were forced to live in while at Prufrock Preparatory School, and I am afraid that some of the crabs tried to snatch my stationery away from me.

On Sunday night, please purchase a ticket for seat 10-J at the Erratic Opera Company's performance of the opera Faute de Mieux. During Act Five, use a sharp knife to rip open the cushion of your seat. There you should find my description of the children's miserable half-semester at boarding school, entitled THE AUSTERE ACADEMY, as well as a cafeteria tray, some of the Baudelaires' handmade staples, and the (worthless) jewel from Coach Genghis's turban. There is also the negative for a photograph of the two Quagmire Triplets, which Mr. Helquist can have developed to help with his illustrations.

Remember, you are my last hope that the tales of the Baudelaire orphans can finally be told to the general public.

With all due respect,

To My Kind Editor,

Please excuse this ridiculously fancy stationery. I am writing to you from 667 Dark Avenue, and this is the only paper available in the neighborhood. My investigation of the Baudelaire orphans' stay in this wealthy and woeful place is finally complete—I only pray that the manuscript will reach you.

Not next Tuesday, but the Tuesday after that, purchase a first-class, one-way ticket on the second-to-last train out of the city. Instead of boarding the train, wait until it departs and climb down to the tracks to retrieve the complete summary of my investigation, entitled THE ERSATZ ELEVATOR, as well as one of Jerome's neckties, a small photograph of Veblen Hall, a bottle of parsley soda, and the doorman's coat, so that Mr. Helquist can properly illustrate this terrible chapter in the Baudelaires' lives.

Lemony Snicket

To My Kind Editor,

I am sorry this paper is sopping wet, but I am writing this from the place where the Quagmire Triplets were hidden.

The next time you run out of milk, buy a new carton at Cash Register #19 of the Not-Very-Supermarket. When you arrive home, you will find my description of the Baudelaires' recent experiences in this dreadful town, entitled THE VILE VILLAGE, has been tucked into your grocery sack, along with a burnt-out torch, the tip of a harpoon, and a chart of the migration paths of the V.F.D. crows. There is also a copy of the official portrait of the Council of Elders, to help Mr. Helquist with his illustrations.

Remember, you are my last hope that the tales of the Baudelaire orphans can finally be told to the general public.

With all due respect,

Lemony Snicket

So You Want To Understand Imperialism: an introductory reading list

This is part 1 of my theory recs; rather than dumping hundreds of titles into a Google doc and releasing it into the wild, I figured it would be less overwhelming to break them down by topic. This list is obviously non-exhaustive, and I might add some links to it at a later date, but it contains what I consider fundamental readings. Some books I was initially going to include here I kept for future posts instead, because they cover intersecting topics like settler colonialism or political economy.

You will be able to find all the recs under this tag. Drop me a message if one of the links is broken and I'll do my best to replace it. Happy learning!

- National Liberation and Neocolonialism 101, selected writings by Lenin, Nkrumah, Amilcar Cabral, Che Guevara, and Bill Fletcher

- Imperialism, the Highest Stage of Capitalism — V. I. Lenin
+ The Internationalist Lenin: Self-determination and anti-colonialism — Vijay Prashad

- Capital, Volume I, Chapter Thirty-One: Genesis of the Industrial Capitalist — Karl Marx

- How Europe Underdeveloped Africa (audiobook also available) — Walter Rodney
+ The World Turned Upside Down: Rodney's 1972 masterpiece — Leo Zeilig
